The Year in Review

With food insecurity growing with the rising costs of groceries and housing this past year, the Snoqualmie Valley Food Bank rose to the challenge of increased need in our community. By empowering families with healthy food options, supporting senior citizens on fixed incomes, and connecting struggling households with the resources they needed for stability, we continued our mission to make the Snoqualmie Valley a place where no one is hungry.

*The food bank relies on a significant amount of in-kind support in the form of rescued food from grocery stores, bulk food and commodities from Northwest Harvest and Food Lifeline, and donations of food by individuals. This system reduces food waste while increasing access to healthy food for everyone in our community. Grants, government support and public support are equally crucial to our success, allowing us to pay staff, keep the lights on, have internet, and purchase food items like milk, eggs, and fresh fruit and vegetables to ensure that healthy options are available to all.

A Community in Action

I'm incredibly grateful for our community's support this past year. From lemonade stands and benefit concerts to food drives, community gardens, and generous donors, you rallied to ensure that in a time of growing need, no one went hungry.

This past year saw an increase in households turning to the food bank for help, as the rising costs of food and housing squeezed budgets. We heard countless stories from local workers struggling with rental cost increases, families facing childcare challenges, and seniors seeing their costs outpacing their fixed incomes. We helped families in crisis find their foundations after house fires, deaths of family members, job losses, and devastating health news. As one of the first places where people turn during times of financial challenge, we were well-positioned to provide not just food, but hope and connections to the resources they needed for stability.

Despite the challenges of the increased level of food insecurity in our area, we were humbled by the countless displays of generosity, solidarity and love we witnessed from our clients, our team, our volunteers and our community.

Looking ahead, we're preparing for a continued increase in the need for our services in 2025. We've long outgrown our current physical space, and we are fully engaged in addressing the urgent need for a new location that will allow us to support the increased number of clients in a respectful, welcoming, and efficient space. We remain committed to deepening our impact, expanding our partnerships, and continuing to bring hope and service to all with dignity and respect.

We're grateful for your partnership in helping us create a community where everyone has healthy food and the support they need to thrive. Thank you for your support.
